The Sermon 11/8/26

This week is the final in our long Acts series, "What Jesus Means - A Spiritual Education." The theme is What's She Up to Now? which refers to the Holy Spirit. In this finale, we get the capstone message in which Peter learns how what he is saying is true by the Spirit falling on his Roman listeners. He understands in some fundamental way that the Holy Spirit moves among people so they can live out their calling and faithfulness in the way of Jesus. So as he is preaching, he has an epiphany: "I guess this is where she lives now: among our enemies." They've already been empowered to live faithfully as Jesus did, there's nothing left but to affirm their presence in the community of faith. They will have to learn how to live together after that.

Questions:

Peter ends his speech by preaching nearly identical words to those the Eunuch used when claiming their own inclusion into God's people. What does this signify?

These chapters in Acts - from the choosing of redistribution ministers in Acts 6, to Peter's preaching to Cornelius' household in acts 10 - have all been an education for the proto-church as they learn "What Jesus Means." Who has been the teacher and what has been the lesson?

What is there to be learned for "today's Christians and Jesus' followers" from these stories? What and how might the Spirit want to teach us?
